Teachers gather on Capitol steps to protest cuts

By LINDA KELCHNER

Staff Writer
Several hundred Utah teachers gathered on the steps of the Capitol on Friday in protest of possible cuts in the Legislature in the state's budget.

The Alpine Education Association, acting ads on local television newscasts last week in regard to what the group considered legislators' apparent lack of concern for education.

"Legislators expect us to teach our children this year," said Betty Condie, vice president of the Utah Education Association.

"The decision would decrease the state's retirement fund as well as public employee retirement," said Alpine Education Association President Paul Mortensen.

"Legislature should not be cut by the public retirement fund or cut to balance its budget," Mortensen said.

"I am concerned that the state would retire from the retirement system," he said.

Condie said the Legislature is asking 4% percent of the funds allocated for retirement and use half of it to balance the budget.

"We feel the Legislature should increase the tax on oil and natural gas, since Utah has a lower-than-average tax anyway, instead of making the school system pay," she said.

"Schools' loads are high and the schools are not being properly funded," said Provo Education Association President Jim Campbell.

"It's not a matter of salary, because I enjoy my job, but it is ridiculous that out of my own pocket I have to buy supplies for my art class," he said.

"Education is at a crisis point, and something needs to be done to do something," said Nebo Education Association President Brad Walker.

"Educators are partly to blame — every year, whatever the legislators say, we buck up and take it."

"Not many legislators have actually been inside the schools and seen the situation," he said.

Walker suggested a raise in taxes would help alleviate some problems, but that "an increase in taxes is a dirty word."

The Utah Education Association is a teacher's professional and lobbying organization.

Saudi Arabia predicts uniform oil cut

OPEC meet makes little progress

ONDON (AP) — Saudi Arabia said today that OPEC "most likely" will agree on a uniform cut in the next two hours. But ministers in the feuding 13-member cartel reported little progress of crises talk.

After days of infighting, by Iran, the Organization of Exporting Countries' progress in Wednesday's ions, sources said.

I have struggled to agree on a base price for its oil and production cutbacks in hopeing the market and helping the world's refiners. The current OPEC base price is $34 a barrel, but have slumped in the face of a oil glut.

Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil r, told reporters during the talks that he saw hope for by Thursday night. "The country is the largest oil exporter also said oil still faced "many problems added, "we are solving esian Oil Minister Dr. Subhose country has supported the Saudis' call for a drop of about $4 a barrel in the OPEC price, said after a morning session. "We're making progress."

Other sources said privately, however, that negotiations had failed to give the cartel toward agreement.

The sources were interviewed on condition they not be identified.

Iran's deputy oil minister, Abbas Hosseini, told reporters Wednesday morning that his country would reduce its oil production target by 1 million barrels daily, or about one-third, if OPEC abandoned its planned price cut.

Iran had said Monday it would never accept a lower OPEC base price.

The Iranians reportedly are discounting their oil price by as much as $8 a barrel below the agreed OPEC base price.

If OPEC lowered that base, it is believed Iran would reduce its price by a like amount in order to keep its oil high. Iran is fighting a war with Iraq and needs oil revenue to finance the war.

Algeria's official news agency, meanwhile, said it was also opposed to cutting the base price. Algeria often sides with Iran in price disputes within OPEC.

Nigeria, one of OPEC's financially weak links, continued to resist pressure from other cartel members to reduce its part of the $5.50 price cut it announced last month. Saudi Arabia and some other members want Nigeria to raise by 50 cents its new price of $30 a barrel.

That would allow OPEC to set a new base price at $29 or $29.50 a barrel, which might stabilize the price of oil on the open market.

The Nigerians have argued, saying they can't keep their oil below that of North Sea oil, which is sold by non-OPEC members Britain and Norway.

Because their oil is of similar high quality, those three countries are stiff competitors in the European market.

Several OPEC ministers have said it is crucial they achieve an agreement here. Failure probably would push oil prices even lower on the open market, threatening non-OPEC producers to lower their official contract prices. That could trigger a price war that would envelop Nigeria and other OPEC members.

The White House said President Reagan might not be swayed by passage of the bill.

The resolution calls upon the administration to use the START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) for the purposes of "pursuing a complete halt to the nuclear arms race" and "deciding when and how to achieve a mutual verifiable freeze on testing, production and further deployment of nuclear weapons missiles and other delivery systems."

Richard R. Burt, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, told a House Armed Services subcommittee that the resolution would undercut arms control negotiations with Moscow.

Burt added that "a freeze would undermine our capacity to defend Europe and it would inspire doubts among European leaders about our resolve to do so. As such, it would have the most deleterious effect on the underpinnings of the (NATO) alliance."

Pentagon official Richard N. Perle testified, "a freeze would delight the Soviets."

Perle, assistant secretary of defense for international security policy, argued that a freeze would enable the Soviets to retain their relatively new arsenal while U.S. strategic weapons date back to the 1950s and 1960s and are approaching obsolescence and irreversibility."

Their testimony came as the Pentagon released a 107-page study detailing the "relentless" growth of Soviet military power.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he thinks some form of nuclear freeze or arms reduction measure will be adopted by Congress this year.

The measure would solve the remaining one-third of the deficit by mixing a 5 percent benefit cut for new retirees a quarter century from now with a 10 percent payroll tax increase in 2015.

Piele said the change would not occur "until in the future." With people living longer, he added, "raising that age is absolutely inevitable. Now is the time. You miss this chance and we will end up in the future just raising taxes."

Rep. James M. Shannon, D-Mass., at 30 one of the House's younger members, said the change "fits right into the fears of the millions of younger workers who believe that they will never see a Social Security check."

The bill, deviating in only a few details from the blueprint prepared by the National Commission on Social Security Reform, would require virtually every American worker and retiree to share the burden of bailing out the system.

The bill would make affluent retirees pay income tax on half their benefits; delay this July's cost-of-living increase for six years; eliminate payroll tax increases; boost the levy on the self-employed; and force new federal workers to join Social Security in 1984.

The measure also includes a $2.2 billion, six-month extension of supplemental unemployment benefits that will allow some workers 10 additional weeks of unemployment; a Supplemental Security Income increase of $20 a month for individuals and $30 for couples in July; and a so-called "prospective payment" plan for Medicare, under which hospital fees would be set in advance.

EPA chief resigns from post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anne McGillicuddy Burford resigned Wednesday as chief of the environmental protection agency, and President Reagan said the resignation was "an occasion of sorrow for all."

The announcement came shortly after the White House said it was releasing to Congress documents it had refused to turn over earlier in congressional investigations of the agency.

A close friend of Burford, Freda Poundstone, said the EPA chief quit because she "felt her resignation was in the best interests of the EPA and in the president's interest."

After the announcement of the release of documents, chief presidential spokesman Larry Speakes was asked whether President Reagan still has faith in Burford as administrator of the EPA and he replied: "Let's wait and see."

Ragan had expressed confidence in the administrator as recently as Saturday.

Burford's resignation follows three months of turbulent relations between the EPA, Congress, the Justice Department and the White House.

At the heart of the matter was the EPA's $1.6 billion superfund to clean up hazardous waste dump sites, and charges that the fund had been misappropriated and manipulated for political reasons.

Burford — Anne Gorsuch before her marriage Feb. 20 to Robert Burford — was cited for contempt of Congress last Dec. 16 after she refused, under orders from the president, to provide a House subcommittee with documents on the superfund.

President Reagan claimed executive privilege and the Justice Department filed suit on Burford's behalf to block the contempt citation, but lost in court.

Prison inmates hold jobs while serving jail sentences

By WENDY BLASER

gram that enables jail inmates to work while they are in jail is not only helping inmates to feel better but is also benefiting the taxpayer, said the county jail coordinator for Adult Protection and Community Corrections.

As inmates can work while they are in jail, many of them are not having to turn to welfare, said Jerry adding, "I think the program has been very effective."

a case goes to court, the judge can decide if the person is eligible to be on a work-release program. Taylor care is treated individually, and judgment upon the severity of the offense and prior history offender, he said.

People released to work are property offenders, people that are a threat to the society," Taylor mates are serving time in the minimum security jail.

Inmates are currently on the work-release program at the Utah County jail, and at one time as many as 40 have participated in the work program, Taylor stated at the Utah State Prison said 30 inmates are being released from prison to work. That is one-tenth of the inmates housed in the minimum security areas.

The purpose of the program is to help the inmates feel able and work, Taylor said.

Only inmates questioned three inmates about the work program. All three said they felt the program was worthwhile.

The inmate completes a form requesting to work and agrees to abide by certain rules, such as not drinking alcohol or being under the influence of contraband into the jail, Taylor said. Upon returning to the jail after each work day, the inmates are searched.

"Work release is a privilege, and inmates can lose it," said John Gruebaum, deputy sheriff supervisor for the Utah County jail.

Inmates can lose the opportunity to work because of fighting in the jail or breaking rules at the jail or work, Gruebaum said.

Gruebaum said the public is supportive of letting the inmates work, and there has been a good response from the community.

"My employer let me keep my job at a shoe store, so I was lucky," said inmate Steve Alex.

It is good just to be out and also making money, Alex said.

A schedule of working hours is posted for each inmate on the program and there is control over who leaves the jail, Taylor said. The inmates are required to report prior to when they are imposed to be at work and are expected back at the jail 1½ hours after they finish work.

Inmates' paychecks are not collected by jail personnel, but arrangements are made for some inmates to give up some of the earnings to pay fines or repay victims, Taylor said. It is expensive to house inmates in jail, and letting them work aids the taxpayers as well as the inmates, Taylor said. Also, the inmates can still provide for their families so they can assist their wives and children may not be necessary.

"If the inmates were unemployed, then this gives some of them an incentive and the motivation to work," Taylor said.

All three said they felt the program was worthwhile.

second language service

Department offers ESL classes

BY LORRI CARLSON
Staff Writer

The English Department is training the community by training as teachers and offering free English as a second language, according to the coordinator of the program.

"We hope to be a service to the community, particularly to those who speak any English and do not mean to get into any other room. We also wish to give our students practical experience in the program," said Cheryl Brown, an instructor of linguistics. The English classes are for people who are not native English speakers. The classes will be taught Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, beginning Thursday and running through April 14.

The classes are scheduled from 4:10 p.m. to 5 p.m. at Amanda Knight Hall, located on the corner of University Avenue and 500 North in Provo. They will be taught by students in BYU's English as a Second Language program.

The 14 students who will be teaching are presently taking ESL 477, which is an introduction to methods and materials in English as a Second Language. They will team teach their own classes. There will probably be about 10 students in each class, Brown said.

The program consists of teaching the speaking aspect of the English language, with an emphasis on grammar and pronunciation. Reading and writing in English will not be taught.

"I will be teaching grammar, vocabulary and pronunciation. At first I was frightened about teaching, but now that I've been around and seen English taught as a second language, I'm excited to teach. It's exciting when someone learns a concept you have been teaching," said Cary Krog, a graduate student from South Dakota majoring in linguistics.

Leslie VanGiesen, a graduate student from Missoula, Montana, made it clear she would like to teach, but now that "I've been around and seen English taught as a second language, I'm excited to teach. It's exciting when someone learns a concept you have been teaching," said Cary Krog, a graduate student from South Dakota majoring in linguistics.

She said she hopes to help those who need special and additional help in English.

"I will have the chance to exercise my teaching skill and work with real students," VanGiesen said.

The ESL program is offered each semester and has been running for at least five semesters, Brown said. The teaching varies with the personalities of the program's teachers and students, and each student's level of learning.

"Each person who wishes to be a student can take a placement test. By the performance on this test, we will know the person's strengths and weaknesses in English." The students will be placed in classes based on results of the tests, she said.

Brown said BYU brings many foreign people to the Provo area.

"Many foreign students bring their wives and husbands to them to this area. The spouses usually do not know how to speak English. This program will help those people who need training," she said.

Because The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is strong in this area, Provo is a place for foreign members to be with other LDS Christians. These people come to Utah to associate with members of the church, but they usually can hardly speak or understand English, Brown said.

People interested in the classes can go to Amanda Knight Hall on Thursday for placement testing. More information is available from the Linguistics Department, 2129 JKHB.

Cougars' final hurrah

By ROBES PATTON
Sports Editor

BYU's season-ending battle with Wyoming on Saturday will be the grand finale for a career that has spanned some of the greatest years in Cougar hardwood history.

Great Cougars beat out with a final go-round under the basket against the rival Cowboys.

And while it may not seem like it now, the season center may be sorely missed over the next few years.

Kite, who began his career at BYU during Alan Taylor's senior campaign, was in the middle during the Cougars' final-eight finish in 1981.

A career that has developed into a solid defensive post man, he has taken heat for much of his career because his offensive production has failed to please many fans.

But Kite's presence in the middle, his rebounding and willingness to sacrifice hasn't exactly damaged the careers of Danny Ainge, Fred Roberts, Steve Trumbo or Devitt Durrant.

Although he has taken a back seat nationally to Rick Barry, Kite has been a solid choice and others, Kite always seemed to hold his own against Ralph, Steve Johnson, Tom Chambers and others.

Kite has given a lot to BYU, but it has often seemed his donation went unnoticed, or worse, unappreciated.

Another Cougar who will enjoy a final hurrah is forward Gary Furniss, a contributor to BYU's reputation as one of the most physical teams in the nation.

Furniss, who transferred from Utah State after a mission before the 1981 season, is another brother who will probably be sorely missed by the Cougars, although opponents he made sure are probably glad to see him go.

The "I couldn't believe my eyes" department: With 59 seconds remaining in the first half of Saturday's game against Utah, two people were finding themselves in the same place.

No problem — they were only 14 minutes late to the biggest game of the year.

And it's hard to believe that a fan was threatened bodily harm if he didn't sit down. Coach Frank Arnold's letter to the editor on Tuesday was a fine compliment to the students who sat down for the family members who insisted on queuing for admission. If they don't want to do anything except sit and vegetate, they should go next door to the Bean Museum.

It's conference tournament time again and one of the first victims is Oklahoma of the Big Eight. The Sooners were bumped 87-77 to the Jayhawks by Kansas. It's unfair for a team which first was invited to its conference due to the regular season only to get knocked out during the league tournament.

A lucky, last-second shot can cost a deserving team an NCAA bid and put a loser in the national tournament.

Almost every conference renders the regular-season meaningless with the post-season tournaments. The WAC, however, continues to resist it.

It would be sad if Air Force or Colorado State, for example, got hot or lucky in a post-season play-off and sent the deserving teams home.

Look for Memphis State, Oklahoma, Washington State, Louisiana State and Cal State Fullerton as post-season spoilers.

And let us not forget that Wyoming deserves at least as much fan intimidation as Utah did.

Top teams compete

The third-ranked BYU men's golf team is in Guadalajara, Mexico today competing with a number of the nations top golf teams in the Rafael Alcantar International.

Texas, A&M, Texas, Oklahoma, Wake Forest, North Carolina, USC, all ranked in the top 10, will be challenging the Cougars for the title. UCLA and Florida State from the top 20 will also be among the field of 12 teams that will be participating in 12-hole tournaments.

"We will be in last tournament before the NCAA championships, when we will be competing against schools from the Midwest, South and East," said BYU golf coach Carl Tucker. "We get inbred by staying in the West all the time."

"By playing teams like Oklahoma

State and Texas, we get better insight into the college golf picture," added Tucker.

Last month the Cougars placed between Texas and OSU in the Pan American Intercollegiate, and Tucker said he was pleased with the finish.

Tucker said this year's team compares favorably with the one that brought home the NCAA title in 1981.

He went on to say the only difference is there are three individual winners on the team this year. He also said the caliber of golf has improved.

The Cougars will be in California competing in tournaments there during the last two weeks in March.

Weightlifters gain national crowns

BYU weightlifters Victor Petruschin, who competes in the 242-pound weight class, and Lars Henriksson, who competes in the unlimited weight class, returned from Knoxville, Tenn., and the National Collegiate Olympic Lifting Championships after winning their respective weight classes.

Olympic lifting consists of the two-hand snatch and two-hand clean-and-jerk.

During the tournament, Petruschin missed his final attempt in the snatch, a try at 319 pounds, and was left behind by his rival, Thomas Tarter of Lehman College.

Tarter's best clean-and-jerk, however, was 363 pounds, which left him far behind the solid 402.5 pounds that Petruschin made on his final of three successful attempts in the clean-and-jerk. Petruschin's efforts accumulated a total of 716 pounds, which beat him the national title in the 242-pound weight class.

At the conclusion of the snatch in the unlimited class, Henriksson was 38 pounds ahead of his closest rival, giving him a commanding lead. Henriksson went on to clean-and-jerk 396 pounds for a total of 716 and a national title in the unlimited division.

BYU weightlifting coach L. Jay Silvester said he was understandably proud of Petruschin and Henriksson, who are the first athletes ever to compete in the National Collegiate Olympic Lifting Championships for BYU. "It is a great pleasure to associate with well-prepared, effective athletes, and it is even nicer when they win," said Silvester.

The 24 points earned by the two first-place finishers were enough to give BYU third place at team.

"Petruschin and Henriksson were indeed a strong team," said Silvester.

Petruschin said the meet was excellent. "I was five pounds behind after the snatch," he said. "I came back in the clean-and-jerk and blew the guy away."

Petruschin said he won by 65 pounds. "I had pretty much won after the snatch," he said.

Silvester said the quality of the athletes at the meet was good.

Utah QB heads East

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Kenny Vierra, the University of Utah starting quarterback last season, says he plans to transfer to the University of Maryland.

Vierra said Wednesday he would enroll at Maryland during the summer. He would have to sit out a season in accordance with NCAA rules on transfers.

Vierra, who will be a junior in eligibility, started for the Utes most of his freshman and sophomore seasons. He quit the team in December, citing dissatisfaction with Coach Chuck Stobart's run-oriented philosophy.

Vierra, who spoke with coaches from Boise State, Idaho State, Colorado and Texas, said he decided to transfer to Maryland after visiting the campus last week.

The 6-foot-1, 170-pound Vierra said Maryland's coaches had contacted him directly.

Women netters smash Lady Utes

The BYU women's tennis team made easy work of Utah on Wednesday at the BYU Courts, sweeping all six singles and winning the doubles matches in 81-80 route.

Cory Selsky won the No. 1 singles match 6-4, 6-4, and Tina Holding came out on top in the No. 2 singles position, 6-4, 7-5. Canadian Helen Chenodia whipped her No. 3 singles match in 6-0, 6-3 fashion.

Not all the matches were straight set victories, though. Coach Ann Valentine said the No. 5 and 6 matches were long, three-set contests. "This was a better University of Utah team than we've ever played before," she said.

Fox and teammate Susie Hunter were defeated in the No. 2 doubles position for BYU's only loss of the meet.

winning 75 percent of them.

This year's team will be led by captains Cindy Retherford and Glenna de Lisle, said Linde.

"Retherford plays shortstop and pitcher and is one of our strongest hitters," she said. "De Lisle plays left field and should add a lot of strength offensively and defensively. She is very aggressive on the bases."

Linde will also be looking for strong performances from Cathy Bingham, a freshman pitcher, LeAnne Bell at third base, and Cory Green at second base.

"I really stress team unity, however," said Linde. "The team's strongest point is that they support each other well, play well, and get along well together."

Women's softball is an extramural sport at BYU and is therefore not eligible for post-season tournament competition.

According to Linde, the team would be in the High Country Athletic Conference if it were considered an intercollegiate team.

"If we were in a conference, a number of girls on our team play well enough to be considered for awards, such as all-conference," Linde said.

In this weekend's tournament, BYU will play back-to-back games Friday, facing Idaho State at 11 a.m. and Weber State at 1 p.m.

Soccer goes to Ogden

The BYU women's soccer team will face several in-state rivals during an indoor tournament Saturday in Ogden.

Weber State is sponsoring the tournament and will participate, along with Westminster College, Utah and BYU.

"We are ready to meet these teams on an indoor basis, having done well against them in the fall," said assistant coach Steve Asay.

Summers, 18, the graceful and steady skater from Edmunds, Wash., will not pit her talents against world champion Zayak, 17, from Paramus, N.J., after all.

The two teenagers had been dueling for the top titles for two years, with honors even. Zayak won the U.S. title in 1981 and the world crown last year. Summers edged her for the U.S. National title in 1982 and again this year.

Entertainment*Company 'plays' with child drama

By LORI STEPHENSON
Staff Writer

For the young, young at heart, or those just interested in getting away from the seriousness of school for a change, the Young Company has something to offer.

In its first year of child drama, the Young Company will be performing an original play at BYU from Thursday through Saturday at 6 p.m. in the Mergentz Arena Theater HFAC.

Matinee performances will be given Saturday at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

"The Archer Who Went I Know Not Where to Fetch I Know Not What" is an original script written by Doan Farrell with original music composed by Larry Pearson, said Christine Smith, the play's director.

Everything for the play has fallen remarkably into place, Smith said.

Long title

Although long and somewhat confusing, the title of the Russian folktale appeals to the children, she said.

The company got involved in the performances and are often heard referring to characters as their "buddies," or as scary," she said.

"They tell me they hate me," said Scott Fowler, a freshman who plays a villain in the play.

After performances, the children will often ask for autographs, Smith said.

Although the company usually performs for children, its plays can be enjoyed by audiences of all ages, Smith said.

According to Fowler, students attending a recent theater-related workshop were told that good children's theater is appropriate for all audiences.

"We try to make the characters real and believable," Smith said. "Just because it's children's theater doesn't mean it can't do a good job."

The company tours on Tuesdays and Thursdays, taking performances to local and Salt Lake City elementary and junior high schools.

The performers in the Young Company productions are not limited to people involved in theater, but they come from a wide range of backgrounds, Smith said.

Fowler, an advertising major and assistant director for the play, said he enjoys the company because it is an opportunity to get away from general education classes.

According to Smith, students get involved with the company because it is fun and enjoyable.

Time involved

Because the company uses several days during the week and holds rehearsals on Saturdays, it requires a great deal of time for those involved.

Smith earned her bachelor's degree in theater and is currently working on her master's degree in child drama. Everything just seemed to evolve towards child drama, she said.

"It's a great way to keep children happy. Nothing could be more fun."

Eventually, Smith said, she hopes to teach on a college level and to have a touring troupe of her own.

The Young Company will visit BYU again March 24 through 26 to perform "Cinderella."

Conductor leads with skill, humor

By CAMI MATTISON
Staff Writer

A leading person at BYU is Women's Chorus conductor Bryce Rytting, a graduate student from Salt Lake City majoring in musicology.

The Women's Chorus will perform today at 8 p.m. in the Lang Concert Hall HFAC.

Rytting has conducted the Women's Chorus at BYU for two years and has conducted several BYU opera productions, including the recent "Don Giovanni."

At age 15, Rytting became involved with music. "I suffered from massive insecurity," he said. Rytting said he was too clumsy to play football, so he decided to sing.

Twelve years later, his interest shifted to classical music. Rytting later attended the University of Utah, where he received a degree in music theory.

Jerald Ottley, the conductor of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, told Rytting he needed the experience of studying with professional musicians. This prompted Rytting's decision to attend a conducting workshop by Helmuth Rilling in Oregon.

"It was a spontaneous reaction," he said. Rytting was headed back to Utah after mountain climbing in the Tetons and turned off at Idaho Falls to go to Oregon.

Within six weeks after attending the workshop, Rytting had sold everything he owned to go to Frankfurt, Germany, where he spent three years studying under Rilling.

Rytting soon had to make the decision whether to remain in Europe or return to the United States, he said.

A job conducting the Women's Chorus at BYU was offered to him. At first Rytting wanted to stay in Europe, but "within the next two weeks my conscience and the spirit told me that I needed to go to BYU," he said.

Three conductors will lead the Women's Choir in this year's Christmas concert. Michael Nibley, chairman of the Music Department, will conduct his original piece "May My Life Reflect Thy Will." Reid Nibley, a professor in the Music Department, will conduct his arrangement of the hymn "Sweet is the Work," Rytting said.

In the concert, Rytting said he will talk about the musical structure of the pieces and will add humor along the way.

"I'm trying to do something off-the-wall," he said. "Most choral concerts in America are boring. They only attract the kids' mothers."

Rytting is committed to making concerts informative and appealing to the general audience.

Last year, the Women's Chorus presented a Christmas concert on April 6 and involved the audience by having them join the choir while they sang Christmas songs.

Put bus service question to a vote

A great deal has been said in the news and on the editorial page in recent days about the bus service in Provo. Much of the controversy has surrounded a ruling by the Public Service Commission that mall shuttles operating separately from the Provo City Lines are illegal.

Many people were angry with the ruling and several statements made by the City Lines owner about the maturity of BYU students and the rights of "poachers" who operate other bus services.

Some students have called for a boycott of the city lines to show student disapproval for the service and the attitudes of its proprietor.

It is doubtful, however, that an unorganized boycott would have much effect, because there is a captive audience of students and missionaries who need transportation to the University Mall.

What those who call for a boycott seem to be saying, though, is that better bus service is needed, and they wonder if anyone cares enough to provide that service.

Even though the owner of the Provo lines has been accused of not providing a good bus service here, Utah Valley citizens must also share the blame for the inadequate bus service.

Several years ago they had the opportunity along with voters in Salt Lake and Weber counties to approve a quarter-cent sales tax increase to finance a new Utah Transit Authority bus system that would serve the three counties.

The system and the tax was approved in the other two counties but voted down here. The vote was understandable in light of the times, however. The economy looked fairly good and there seemed to be little need for public transportation, except perhaps, for BYU students.

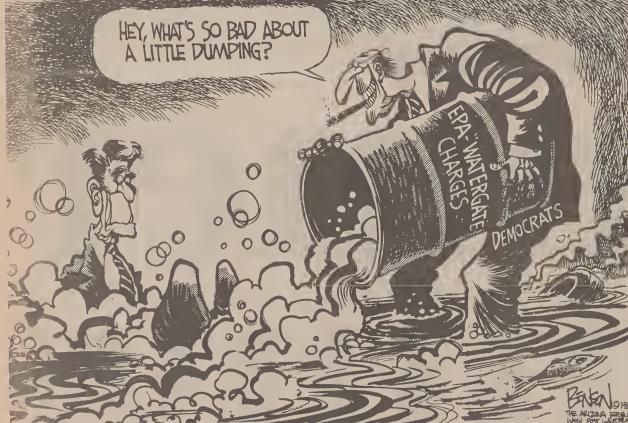

Students do not comprise a majority of the population and most don't vote anyway so the student voice wasn't heard.

Times have changed since then. With a tighter economy, many average citizens need a bus service that has more than one bus on one route that only comes once an hour. They need buses that can be counted on to be on time and that will go to various points throughout the city and county.

If the situation in the northern counties is an indicator, the service would have been better with the UTA. Provo and Orem would have several bus lines and a rider could even go to Salt Lake City for about $3.

What is needed more than another boycott is the chance for Utah County voters to take another look at joining the UTA. An additional quarter-cent tax on each dollar may cost a little at the store but the benefits of an adequate bus service for Provo and the surrounding area would far outweigh the costs.

The time is ripe for another election to give voters a chance to say whether a single bus mostly serving as a shuttle between BYU and the mall is enough. The Provo City Lines may be protected by existing laws and their enforcement by the Public Service Commission, but voters, including BYU students, do have a choice and should have another chance to voice their approval or disapproval of Provo's bus service.

Letters to the Editor

Draft opposition to save own skin

Editor:

In reference to Gary Piley's letter to the editor denouncing the government's withholding of aid to students who refuse to register for the draft, there seem to be some assumptions and implications which insult intelligence. Maybe Mr. Piley can confirm the following implications for his audience:

1. All involvement in wars is immoral.
2. All aid to students is in the form of loans.
3. Student loans are paid back (by those who borrow).

4. Assuming the above is true, there is no cost to the government for student loans because they are paid back.

5. The U.S. government cannot support both the military and education.

6. The thought of dying appeals to those who register for the draft.

Honestly, Mr. Piley, I think I would understand if your concern was killing for a cause which you feel is not just, but your letter leads me to believe that this isn't your concern. Your personal welfare is...

After making a statement concerning national defense that "(you) are not interested," does it really surprise you that many have similar sentiments concerning your education?

Elections a joke

Editor:

Why are over half the votes for student elections coming from freshmen? If you want the answer, just look around. As a sophomore, we think most experienced students as freshmen, we think most upper-classmen have come to the conclusion that elections are a joke. For example, Decker/Stephens, 1981. It's as though the people running our intelligence, running around dressed up like Coke cans or boxes of sugar.

Is that the way we get votes, kids? Let's not be stupid. Why don't you take your Coke can, culture boxes, cowboy hats and every other ridiculous trick you've got and go to the grade schools? We're sure you can get lots of fan support there. Or, better yet, you can all get together and form a circus and travel — like out of state.

Registering lives

Editor:

The opinions expressed in The Daily Universe on Thursday indicate that draft registration is still a popular policy. Indeed, we sometimes must be willing to compromise some freedoms in order to protect other freedoms. I would guess that most of these same people still support draft registration, because that would "infringe on their freedom." In other words, they don't trust the government enough to register their guns, yet they do trust the government enough to register their lives. I see this as either a strange order of priorities or a contradiction.

Take care of own

Editor:

On behalf of our family we would like to express our appreciation for the love and concern extended to us by the BYU administration, staff and students. We are grateful for the love and concern of our father, Ross Esplin. If one of the purposes of the church is to build a self-sustaining people, "pure religion" was practiced as students and staff joined in to express love for him and support on our behalf. Certainly BYU takes care of their own.

Individuality best

Editor:

I want to applaud Leah Rhodes for the article on "Other schools offer contracts." It gave LDS members an inkling of what the "real world" outside Provo, Utah, is really like. As BYU students, we are used to a programmed lifestyle where deviation from standard is looked down upon. We are in a sense "clones" as Suzy Tuttle terms it. Outside

Candidates will win after all

The living death. The horror of it has been portrayed in a hundred zombie movies. At BYU, it grips the student and zips him off to his own personal twilight zone whenever he is approached by an ASBYU candidate passing out literature. The bite zone of this episode is designed to tell the candidate, "I am lost in my thoughts and am therefore justified in ignoring you."

The living death was just one of the strategies used to ignore one Daily Universe writer who posed as a candidate for two days during the primaries. The writer was a member of the ASBYU team, and his roommate, who already was anonymous, ran under the aliases, Wendell Chancellor and Ernie Franklin. Their slogan, "a different approach to ASBYU," was certainly appropriate.

Clad in wool pinstripe suits and burgundy ties, the two candidates approached students on the quad. They were armed with a list of dredged flies that extolled the virtues of the Wendell/Ernie ticket. The quote from Wendell's mission president and the comment by Ernie's ex-girlfriend were sure to make the flyers effective. Despite Thursday's drizzle, Wendell and Ernie proudly positioned themselves at the library's south entrance.

After a couple of rigorous hours of passing out flyers and talking with students, Wendell and Ernie catalogued some standard student responses to candidates. The glaze-eyed, don't-bother-me-when-I'm-ignoring-you living death response is just one of these. The living death response is probably the most popular and for good reason. It saves the donor the trouble of having to acknowledge the candidate's presence, being friendly, and of accepting or declining his campaign literature. Pretending he is not there is much easier — fantasy always is.

winxes with contempt as he passes the candidate's outstretched hand.

But both Wendell and Ernie later observed, the polite no-thanks you were a waste of time. The students were unsatisfied dictators who had finally resorted to wiring their jaws shut. Unfortunately this was not the case and eventually Wendell and Ernie hired a mumble interpreter to help them deal with the mumbler among us.

Another living death response is the bimble. Wendell and Ernie made this their round-up-to-size comment. "I'm a communist," quipped one freshman who apparently does not realize that communists' votes count as much as anyone else's. "I'll just throw it away," remarked another when offered Wendell-Ernie literature. Some students campaigned to win the support of the most unlikely to see like a reject from a convention of Don Rickles impersonators. According to Ernie's research, some chimpanzees at the University of Illinois at Peoria had been taught to make similar statements.

The response that both Wendell and Ernie found most distressing as they began their campaign was the bimble. Before they ever began campaigning, Wendell and Ernie subjected themselves to invisibleograms at the Health Center. The results were negative; both are perfectly opaque. Even so, the invisible candidate response was quite popular.

The invisible candidate begins as the student approaches the candidate and establishes eye contact. The student slows his pace, looks down at the floor, and then looks back at the candidate again. Even though the candidate speaks to the student, the student makes no sound and his face

No one likes an ambitious person.

The person out to elevate himself by flaunting his accomplishments and dreams is the most obnoxious of them all.

As Wendell and Ernie found, the election system casts dictators into that obnoxious, ambitious role.

In a campaign that lasts only two weeks, name recognition is all that a candidate can hope to establish.

His qualifications are secondary.

So candidates pursue the most visible, carnival-like, attention-getting approach to the campaign possible.

So candidates stand in the rain for ASBYU. The rest of us sit around complaining that ASBYU is a joke and that candidates are jerks.

The candidates are the winners.

The people out to elevate themselves

by flaunting their accomplishments and dreams are the ones intent on making a difference, whether they actually do or not.

— Wendell Chancellor

The ideas of March have all come to pass. The idea of appreciation for while studying at BYU. The rain starts to melt from the ski slopes. The frequent overnight rains result in thousands of earthworms to exit the wet sidewalks, creating a unique smell, sound and sensation they find themselves underneath like my Nike's.

Anual ritual

Most years all, though, though annual ritual that takes place in the windy month of ASBYU. It seems to bring out both the best and the worst of our students.

The best has to include sports, dresses, smiles, handshakes and promises and plenty of scratch paper.

The worst is competition, at apathy, sour tempers, at a car atmosphere and promises.

Gag campaigns

Year after year, the majority student body fails to take the elections seriously, with "gag" campaigns frequently winning primary and general elections.

I've always thought of organizing a gag campaign. My candidate would assume the title of "G-Roberts," wearing black and white clothing and running under the slogan "G-Roberts is the winning combination."

Copping out

The students who say they won't campaigns because they're better and they don't care about ASBYU as a serious organization, organize a cop-out. Where you are the best, they're the worst.

Where to place the blame is debatable subject. Of course, the body itself is responsible for the ballot cast, but the other candidates are equally at fault for not offering students a better alternative.

Name recognition

One of the frustrations that faces fans is trying to remember their recognized and remembered student body. Their efforts have such recall has promoted a carnival-like atmosphere, born logos from candy bars, pop song boxes and TV shows, advertising signs and posters across campus.

Another visible means of success involves the candidates' physical appearance. Will the smiles be off as quickly and easily as the ties and dresses after elections? And when are announced someone still greet me with a handshake when I arrive in the morning?

Real intent

I've always wanted to possess a permanent poster in discerning real intent behind each candidate's decision to run for ASBYU. I'd like the glory, the rewards and the satisfaction.

Do a scholarship, an "A" sticker and getting preferred to social and athletic events have anything to do with announcing one didn't? Or is it to add a more attractive service responsible one's resume?

I'm glad that I get to share responsibility with the rest of the student body. But then why does that most of the voting students not seek out the qualifications a potential abilities the candidates possess?

Exotic car

Instead, they are all aware of campaign gimmicks. Posters, posters on an exotic car in the corridor area between the WES Center and the library.

The issue seems to boil down limited time allotted for candidates before the primaries. This year, the campaign unleashed a Monday, with a carnival-like atmosphere, Fenton Hall. No wonder candidates spend their time and efforts pushing names, names, and images, i images.

While I admire and respect the programs and services provided by ASBYU, the campus seems to leave a scorching hole in my heart. It's too much service, organization and dedication to hinge on just a couple of a carnival-like event — Scott

Boos not big at BYU

To boo or not to boo, that is the question.

At any other university this is never a question, at BYU it is a major issue.

BYU fans are not unusual, they cheer a dunk, show up for winners, don't show for losers, and boo.

A boo is a sound made to express disapproval. It is good to know that Cougar fans don't approve of a 500-point loss.

BYU athletics is about the best form of entertainment in Utah Valley and when people go to a show they like to see a good one. Most boos in the Marriott Center are intended for the referees. At BYU a referee is the best target for a boo. If a referee is poor or consistently runs a game with poor officiating, the Cougar fans will let the ref know.

Booing an opposing player or coach is forbidden, there is no justification for this type of behavior in the minds of many Cougar fans. When the boos are directed toward the guys in the striped shirt, that's all it is.

In theater, when someone that's not in the play staggers across the stage and ruins a great dramatic scene, they should be booted too.

In spite of the recent boos trend BYU is not a tough place to play for opposing teams and probably never will be.

Boycott of buses symbol to others

Editor:

I say yes to the boycott of Provo City Lines. A monopoly, whether or not supported by city codes, should be fought with all resources available.

The bus service really is bad, that's why I say yes to the boycott.

'Man' has value

Editor:

Was another vote for "The Elephant Man." The play was fascinating. It questioned both the way we respond to and the way we treat those who differ from us. It paralleled our attempts to fit other people into our own molds. And, through John Merrick, it showed us beautiful child-like qualities of simplicity, inquisitiveness and genuineness.

Merrick was real, as we too often learn not to be, and both he and the play have something of value to offer us.
